Good governance in project implementation includes effective project organisation where everyone has clear roles and responsibilities, written cooperation agreement with the partner and an effective financial management.

Monitoring and evaluation are essential components of project management. They are carried out to make sure that the project work is relevant and to learn on programme progress and effectiveness. Regular monitoring enables the project to anticipate risks and identify the necessary changes to be made into project plans as well. Monitoring and evaluation are also needed to be accountable to stakeholders.
